Topic: Respiration

Read the following passage and answer the given questions:

Animals such as elephants, lions, cows, goats, frog, lizard, snakes, birds have lungs in their chest cavity like the human being. A cockroach has a small opening on the sides of its body. other insects also have similar openings. These openings are called spiracles. Insects have a network of air tubes call tracheae for exchange of gases. oxygen-rich air rushes through spiracles into the tracheal tubes, diffuses into the body tissue and reaches every cell of the body. similarly carbon dioxide from the cells goes into the tracheal tubes and moves out through spiracles. These air tubes or trachea are found only in insects and not in any other group of animals. Earthworms breathe through their skin. The skin of an earthworm feels moist and slimy on touching. Gases can easily pass through them. Though frogs have a pair of lungs like human beings, they can also breathe through their skin, which is moist and slippery.

1. What are tracheae?
2. How do earthworms breathe?
3. What do we call the small openings present in cockroaches?
4. The skin of earthworm feels _____ and _____ on touching.
5. _____ from the cell goes into the tracheal tubes and moves out through _____.
